

Curriculum Application & Student Challenges

How to Use This Module in Class

Pause students after a complex combination or a sparring match to discuss where their mind went. Did they get fixated on one mistake? Remind them that Mushin involves not being preoccupied with one thought, keeping the mind flexible.

Student Challenges — Integrate into Training:

- After making a mistake in a form or kata, notice where your mind goes.
- During sparring when your opponent scores — does your mind stay on the mistake or move to the next technique?
- When waiting for your turn in line — practice the Open Guard (watching thoughts pass without engaging).

Reflective Questions — Ask After Training:

- When you made a mistake, did your mind stay on it, or did it move to the next move?
- Were you able to predict your opponent's move by noticing their body language, or were you too focused on your own thoughts?
- Did you experience a moment where you moved without thinking? What did that feel like?
- What distracts you most in the dojo? (e.g., noise, other students, your own self-judgment.)

Module Summary: MIND

The Open Guard: Watching thoughts pass without engaging (Mushin).

The 360-Degree Guard: Expanding from tunnel vision to total room awareness (Zanshin).

The Mental Reset: Visualizing wiping the mind clean of mistakes instantly.

The Shadow Battle: Integrating mindfulness and breath awareness into active free-form movement.

The Inner Replay: Using visualization to mentally rehearse and correct techniques.
